

Conflicts of Interest

Policy

The American Association for Cancer Research (AACR) requires authors, reviewers, and editors to disclose any potential conflicts of interest related to articles submitted for publication in AACR journals. A conflict of interest exists when anyone has financial or personal relationships that could inappropriately influence (bias) his or her actions.

The intent of the AACR Conflict of Interest disclosure policy is to provide authors, editors, and readers with all the facts necessary to make informed judgments about the content of AACR journals.

Authors

All authors will be required to complete a conflict of interest form as part of the initial manuscript submission process. The disclosure of a potential conflict of interest does not necessarily affect the manuscript's chances of acceptance. Disclosures, only when clearly related to the topic of the present manuscript, will appear as a footnote in the published article. Failure by any author to disclose a conflict that later comes to light will result in a ban on that author publishing in any AACR journal for a period of 3 years.

Editors (decision-makers)

Editors-in-Chief, Deputy Editors, Senior Editors, Reviews Editors, Section Editors, or other editors who make final decisions on manuscripts, are required to fill out conflict of interest forms on an annual basis. Editors, on a case-by-case basis, should voluntarily remove themselves from involvement in any manuscript or discussion if they believe they could have a conflict of interest.

Associate Editors, Editorial Board Members, and Peer Reviewers

Persons asked to peer review a manuscript should voluntarily remove themselves from involvement with the manuscript if they believe there is a possible conflict of interest. Reviewers are not required to fill out conflict-of-interest forms.

Procedures

1. Authors will be asked to submit a completed form with their manuscript as part of the electronic submission process.
2. The corresponding author is responsible for obtaining completed forms from all authors of the manuscript.
3. Disclosures that the author deems relevant will be disclosed publicly.
4. Failure by any author to disclose a conflict that later comes to light will result in a ban on that author publishing in any AACR journal for a period of 3 years.
5. Editors-in-Chief, Deputy Editors, Senior Editors, Reviews Editors, Section Editors, or other editors who make final decisions on manuscripts, are required to fill out conflict of interest forms on an annual basis.
