AACR SPECIAL CONFERENCES INFORMATION

AACR IASLC Lung Cancer Conference

January 11-14, 2020 | Marriott Marquis San Diego; San Diego, CA

The American Association for Cancer Research (AACR) and the International Association for the Study of Lung Cancer (IASLC) are pleased to invite you to our sixth biennial international conference on lung cancer science. Established in 2010, this conference has historically joined a diverse group of attendees (physicians, patient advocates, and scientists in basic, translational, and clinical lung cancer research) and provided a venue to discuss recent advances and establish new collaborations. Sessions will range in topics spanning preneoplasia and early detection, immunotherapy, molecular targets, drug resistance, tumor progression, metastasis, and more. This conference is not only a dynamic collaboration of the AACR and the IASLC, two organizations committed to the study of cancer, but also a dynamic collaboration of the many individuals charged with the study and treatment of this disease.

▶ PLEASE NOTE: Tabletop exhibit fee for this conference is $5,000

Advances in Liquid Biopsies

January 13 -16, 2020 | Hilton Miami Downtown, Miami, FL

SOLD OUT

This AACR Special Conference will cover the latest advances in liquid biopsies and how these may be translated to the clinic. Join internationally recognized experts and hear the latest on early detection with ctDNA; minimal residual disease and early-stage disease; hematologic malignancies; genotyping, monitoring of advanced disease, and molecular resistance; circulating tumor cells; alternative “fluids”; and emerging approaches. This conference will provide a unique opportunity for interactions and exchanges between basic scientists, translational researchers, and clinicians. Make plans now to take part in these discussions and meet the top investigators in the field.

The Microbiome and Viruses

February 21-24, 2020 | Hyatt Regency Orlando; Orlando, FL

Over the last several years, the complexity and diversity of gut microbiota within and between individuals has been shown. Studies have shown the influence of the microbiota on immune cell function, tumorigenesis, and more. Sequencing studies have shown the composition of microbial communities differs significantly between those who are healthy and those who are unhealthy, and thus has a profound influence on disease progression and overall health. Within the development of cancer, the microbiota has been implicated in both cause and prevention. The role viruses play in tumor development is also linked to the microbiome. Both genetic and environmental factors can tip the scales from clearance of an infection to the development of cancer. Recent studies have shown that the microbiota is a potential factor that can affect this balance, increasing or decreasing the ability of viral infections to promote carcinogenesis.

The special conference aims to illuminate various areas, including bacterial, viral, and fungal pathogens, and their contributions to the development of cancers. Moreover, the impact of the microbiome on cancers and cancer therapy will also be discussed. The study of the microbiota and its effects on cancer have transformed how we examine therapies and relationships with the immune system. Tumor microenvironments, and the associated tumor microbiota, have also played a role in individualized immunotherapy, and the development of novel therapeutics. This conference will cover a wide range of topics including the role of the microbiota in metabolism and immunity, oncogenic viruses, and the microbiota in cancer prevention and therapy.

The Evolving Landscape of Cancer Modeling

March 2-5, 2020 | Hard Rock Hotel San Diego; San Diego, CA

A veritable explosion of cancer models in recent years has been fueled by technological advances that have enabled the rapid generation of models of increasing complexity and relevance for human cancer. Genetically engineered mouse (GEM) models and cancer cell lines are mainstays for basic and translational cancer research; organoids and patient-derived xenograft (PDX) models are allowing for a better recapitulation of cancer characteristics; and cell-based computational modeling simulates single-cell behavior in virtual tissues of cancer systems. These next-generation models have, in turn, provided key insights into all aspects of cancer biology, including elucidating the actions of stem cells and developmental pathways and the impact of lineage plasticity, understanding metastatic progression, uncovering the roles of the tumor microenvironment and immune system, exploring tumor evolution, and discovering new therapeutic approaches and mechanisms of drug sensitivity and adaptive response. This meeting will highlight recent advances in modeling cancer using mouse models, cell lines, organoids, PDX models, and computational models, focusing on their impact for advancing our understanding of cancer biology, prevention and treatment, and drug response and resistance.

Advances in Prostate Cancer Research

March 12-15, 2020 | Grand Hyatt Denver; Denver, CO

This AACR Special Conference will cover the current findings on the basic biology underlying prostate cancer and how these may be translated to the clinic. Join internationally recognized experts and hear the latest on the biologic drivers of prostate cancer risk, advances in detection and diagnosis, tumor evolution and plasticity, DNA repair, hormone receptor signaling and crosstalk, metabolism, tumor and immune microenvironment, and novel targets. This conference will provide a unique opportunity for interactions and exchanges between basic scientists, translational researchers, and clinicians. Make plans now to take part in these discussions and meet the top investigators in the field of prostate cancer research.
